

A sign of the coming New World Order

July 16, 3:08 AM

Consider for a moment the following quotes. "Maintain humanity under 500 million in perpetual balance with nature," "Guide reproduction wisely encouraging fitness and diversity," and "let all nations rule internally, resolving external disputes in a world court." Sayings you may hear in popular circles today, or perhaps even the national media? Everywhere you turn, we are constantly bombarded with reports concerning obesity, abortion, global warming, diversity, and an ever growing world population. It may surprise you, however, to know that these quotes are not the headlines of a news paper article or even a twitter feed. Instead, these quotes originated from the Georgia Guidestones.

Revealed in 1980 in Elberton, Georgia, the Guidestones is a colossal 25,000 pound granite monument consisting of four 16-foot-high slabs surrounding a central column. Written in Babylonian cuneiform, Classical Greek, and Egyptian hieroglyphs this monument espouses its own Ten Commandments. Also written on the four sides of the capstone are the words, "Let these be Guidestones to An Age of Reason." Perhaps the creator of this memorial may have desired to leave its reader with the wisdom of creating a utopia here on earth, but some have taken the suggestions of the Guidestone to be a blue print for a New World Order. Termed as the ten commandments of the antichrist, the inscriptions are thought to be an esoteric proposal from a secret brotherhood for a new world society. However, they may simply be an elaborate hoax as well. Regardless, the words advocated on the monument are starting to have a ring of truth.

In an interview with ABC, speaker of the house Nancy Pelosi said, ""The family planning services reduce cost. The states are in terrible fiscal budget crises now and part of what we do for children's health, education and some of those elements are to help the states meet their financial needs.

The Georgia Guidestones of Elberton, GA

"One of those - one of the initiatives you mentioned, the contraception, will reduce costs to the states and to the federal government,"

Here are some statistics that you may not have known. Within the US, black women are 3 times more likely than white women to seek an abortion. 64% of all abortions are performed on unwed mothers. 86% of all abortions are performed on women whose family income is less than $59,999 a year. While Ms. Pelosi does not specify how contraceptives will enable states to better appropriate their money or who she feels is the greatest burden on children's health care system, Supreme Court Justice Ginsburg does.

"Frankly I had thought that at the time Roe was decided, there was concern about population growth and particularly growth in populations that we don't want to have too many of," Ginsburg told Emily Bazelon of the New York Times.

"So that Roe was going to be then set up for Medicaid funding for abortion. Which some people felt would risk coercing women into having abortions when they didn't really want them. But when the court decided McRae, the case came out the other way. And then I realized that my perception of it had been altogether wrong."

However, Justice Ginsburg wasn't wrong. According to a 2002 survey by the Guttmacher Institute, nearly 90% of insurers cover abortions. What is the significance of the Guttmacher Institute survey? If private insurers are covering abortions then the proposed National Health Care should as well.

Vice President Judy Waxman of the National Women's Law Center has suggested, "Congress should refrain from practicing medicine and instead let medical professionals determine what health-care services will be included in a benefits package." Even now, a pending appropriations bill for the District of Columbia covering the district's budget has removed prohibitions on the funding of abortions. The significance of this act comes from the fact that D.C. is not a state. As such, the district's budget must go through the US Congress for approval.

Given Speaker Pelosi's previous comments, it seems that Congress agrees. And she is not alone, Surgeon General nominee Dr. Regina

Benjamin, a devout Roman Catholic, supports President Obama's agenda on Abortion. Secretary of State Hillary Clinton confirmed that for the Obama administration the term "reproductive health" includes abortion. Likewise, Supreme Court nominee Sotomayor noted that states could not put an "undue burden" on pregnant women who sought an abortion. Even President Obama told Planned Parenthood supporters that he planned to sign into law the pro-abortion Freedom of Choice Act once he was elected to office.

Still, these are isolated statements made by US officials and does not constitute the initiative of a global society, correct? President Obama, when explaining his decision for the repeal of the global gag rule, said, "For too long, international family planning assistance has been used as a political wedge issue, the subject of a back-and-forth debate that has served only to divide us, it is time that we end the politicization of this issue."

"I have directed my staff to reach out to those on all sides of this issue to achieve the goal of reducing unintended pregnancies," he said. "They will also work to promote safe motherhood, reduce maternal and infant mortality rates and increase educational and economic opportunities for women and girls."

Approximately 42 million children are aborted every year globally. That is an average of 115,000 children a day. 83% of those abortions performed globally are obtained in developing countries. The relationship between President Obama and Planned Parenthood is significant as they help him procure his global agenda. According to the Planned Parenthood website, Planned Parenthood international is in 17 countries including Africa, Asia, and Latin America. Headquarter in New York; they also have regional offices in Bangkok, Thailand, Nairobi, and Kenya.

Does the President of the United States, its Secretary of State, or Speaker of the House have anything in common with the Georgia Guidestones? Only that the philosophies of the two seem to be in agreement. None the less, given the current trend of euthanizing specific demographics, we must understand that there is an apparent agenda being perused. Does that make President Barak Obama the Anti-Christ? No, but the actions of his administration are setting the stage for the return of Babylon and her king. Through the ten rulers of Nebuchadnezzar's dream the Anti-Christ will arise and be ushered into power. However, his rise will also bring about the return of Jesus Christ for His bride.

Many believe that what we are discussing is merely the idle chatter of a Christian fanatic. But events that cannot be denied are already unfolding before our eyes. Just as Christ came to provide redemption for mankind so too will the Anti-Christ come for the destruction of mankind. But you don't see that on the Guidestones, do you?
